From the Senior Chaplain

This is the season of graduations. Last week I received a picture of a young man graduating from Asbury University. His parents are close friends of ours and I have known their son since he was a baby. I have watched him grow into a fine man. I'm excited what the Lord has in mind for his future. It encourages me to know that Caleb has a heart for God and lives by faith. What an excitement he must sense as he moves into the future led by the hand of God. By the way, he graduated with honors in media communication and he's an athlete so it's entirely possible you'll see him on ESPN someday.

Today we'll be recognizing and honoring our high school graduates. Their commencement will guide them into many new challenges and opportunities. We will join our hearts together in praying for them and trusting God to keep them in the palm of His hand. The end of one season of life opens unto the magnitude of God's unfolding glory.

As I have been reflecting upon commencement ceremonies and graduation, I have been reminded that all of us are engaged in a daily commencement. Each day is a new beginning. Every day the plans and purposes of God unfold before our eyes. What opportunities and possibilities lie before us! Regardless of our age, we share in the magnificent blessing we often sing about, "Morning by morning new mercies I see." I hope you rise each day with that reality settled deep in your spirit.

I have many friends in the Salvation Army. When they report the death of one of their members, they say that they have been "promoted to glory." We have had a good many funerals and memorial services recently. Along with family members we have grieved and mourned. We sense the pain of separation. But let's not forget the victory of Christ over death. We celebrated that victory just a few weeks ago. Commencements are celebrations. And the greatest commencement is being ushered into the very presence of the Father for all eternity. No more death, no more crying, no more pain, for the old order of things has passed away.

Thanks be unto God!

Blessings and grace,

Len
